			On the subject of divine power, Dr Kearsley follows the well-worn path of detailed analysis of Tertullian's vocabulary. As a translator from Greek into Latin, Tertullian has enormous cultural importance, since it is very often the choice of vocabulary which he made which has governed the Western expression of theology ever since. Equally important was the process of definition, which in his day was still far from complete. Along with most other early Christians, Tertullian was faced with the formidable task of putting new theological wine into old linguistic wineskins and his success at this can only be measured by considering the way in which so many of his coinages have survived to the present time. Pre-Christian philosophical

<input type="checkbox"/>	On sait peu de choses sur la liturgie en usage dans l'Afrique chrétienne des premiers siècles (fin IIe siècle - début vie), et plus précisément sur la prière eucharistique. Elles ne font l'objet d'aucun exposé qui leur soit propre. Les 140 témoignages réunis ici, quand ils ne suscitent pas uniquement des hypothèses (souvent discutables), livrent des informations éparses et fort partielles. Cela est particulièrement vrai pour la période qui intéresse la CTC. M. K. publie un état minutieux et utile de la question, d'abord dans une bibliographie analytique d'ensemble, puis dans une « esquisse » de la prière eucharistique, dont les traits se précisent d'auteur en auteur : désignation, contenu et structure, improvisation ou lecture d'un formulaire, attitude corporelle. Pour chaque témoignage, il reprend les analyses de ses prédécesseurs et, après une brève discussion, donne son avis en cas de divergence (ainsi pour l'Amen de Tertullien, Spect 25, 5, qui se réfère manifestement à la Communion, et non à la prière eucharistique, comme certains l'ont soutenu). L'œuvre de Tertullien et celle de Cyprien attestent l'absence d'une langue liturgique à leur époque : ce sont des termes génériques, tels que oratio, prex, gratiarum actio, qui sont utilisés à propos de la célébration du saint sacrifice. On trouve chez Tertullien, dans un contexte		sans rapport avec la liturgie, pour affirmer la présence réelle, les formules figura corporis mei (Marc III, 19, 4), hoc est corpus meum (Marc IV, 9, 9), ce qui rendrait vraisemblable leur utilisation pour la consécration du pain. Cyprien atteste de façon beaucoup plus sûre l'existence de plusieurs parties dans la prière eucharistique et la présence en elle d'éléments de texte constants : la Préface (praefatio), avec un fragment de dialogue entre le célébrant et le peuple (DomOr 31 : Sursum corda. - Habemus ad Dominum ; discussion p. 58-59) ; la Consécration, avec reprise partielle, ou peut-être lecture intégrale, du récit de l'institution en Mt 26 (Epist 63, 10) ; la prière d'offrande (offerre pro ou in nomine : l'ambiguïté de la formule semble avoir échappé à M. K. ; voir notre commentaire des Lettres 1-20 [infra n° 105], p. 422-426), avec récitation des noms des morts (Epist 1, 2), des martyrs (Epist 12, 2 et 39, 3), de vivants (dans des circonstances exceptionnelles). En revanche, Cyprien ne dit rien, à la différence de Tertullien (Apol 39, 18), qui puisse accrédi- ter l'hypothèse d'une improvisation de la prière eucharistique. S. D.

K. expose ce qu'il appelle, d'un néologisme, la « korporealistiche Ontologie » du Carthaginois et ses rapports avec le stoïcisme. Tout en reconnaissant sa dépendance par rapport au mouvement philosophique, il souligne l'originalité de Tertullien : alors que les stoïciens enseignent que la substance corporelle est fondamentalement la même pour tous les êtres, il préfère parler, pour chaque être, d'un corpus sui generis (Carn 11, 4). L'auteur expose ensuite l'argumentation développée dans An 5-9 pour défendre la nature corporelle de l'âme : Tertullien se fonde d'abord sur la doctrine stoïcienne, puis il réfute les critiques platoniciennes, s'appuie sur l'exégèse de la parabole du riche et de Lazare (Lc 16, 19-31) et récuse l'argument de l'invisibilité de l'âme. Au bout du compte, la position de Tertullien, développée d'une façon qui n'a pas d'équivalent dans la littérature du christianisme ancien, fut certes une impasse, mais elle connut des échos, notamment chez Vincent Victor, l'adversaire d'Augustin dans le De natura et origine animae, et chez le jeune Augustin lui-même (Conf. 	ORIGINA	The purpose of this paper is to illuminate two passages from Tertullian's De carne Christi (4,1 and 19,3-4) that are connected to the physical nativity of Christ, by examining their medical context, since they both allude to ancient embryology. First, the obscure phrase genitalia in utero elementa (4,1) is placed within the context of Galen's theory of conception; second, Tertullian's comments on the nature of male semen and its qualities (19,3-4) are correlated to similar concepts advocated by Aristotle and Galen.

	ORIGIN	This paper focuses on Tertullian's concept of the human soul (as treated mainly in his De anima), and especially on Tertullian's notion of its corporeality (corporalitas) which he advocates and which can seem surprising at the first glance. <input type="checkbox"/>	FROM: I HAVE:		Faisant partie d'un manuel d'histoire de la pensée politique, cet article a pour but d'esquisser les idées de Tertullien sur les institutions politiques et sociales. Au cœur de la réflexion, une analyse de l'Apologétique, considéré sous cet aspect, se concentre sur les réactions de Tertullien face à deux reproches d'ordre socio-politique alors adressés aux chrétiens (et qui se trouvent décrits de manière plus systématique dans l'Octavius de Minucius Felix) : celui de l'athéisme (contraire à la pietas romaine) et celui de la non-loyauté envers l'État romain. Huit chapitres abordent notamment les sujets suivants de manière succincte, mais claire : l'homme en tant qu'imago et similitudo de Dieu ; le libre arbitre et sa relation avec le péché ; la situation de l'homme après le péché originel ; le rôle du baptême et du martyr dans l'économie du salut.

COMMENTS

This may be a title in its own right, but it may be a paraphrase in German that the article is about Gelasius, with the title 'Gelasius im kirchenpolitischen Dienste seiner Vorgänger' (Tertullian's language u Gelasius: Tertullian's influence on Gelasius)

Another citation gives the same paper as 'Sitzungsberichte Berliner Akad der Wissenschaft, Phil Hist Abt 1935 Heft 6.

Er bemerkte in der christlichen Gemeinschaft diese, die leiten sie, und andere, die sind ihnen unterordnen. Bischöfe, Priester und Diakone gehören zu erster Gruppe. Die Bischöfe leiten besonders die Kirche und sie sind Seelsorger. Sie bewähren auch „munera sacerdotalia“. Diesem Gesetz des Bischofs verleugnete Tertullian niemals deutlich. Als zweite, separate Gruppe in der christlichen Gemeinschaft spezifiziert Tertullian die Laien „Laici“, ein mal verheiratete Männer, die zu „ordo Ecclesie“ (Kirchrangordnung) nicht gehören, haben auch die priesterliche Würde. Die priesterliche Würde der Gläubigen hat der allgemeine Charakter. Classic study of the Italian manuscripts of Tertullian, with descriptions, and working out the derivative nature of nearly all of them, with a stemma, and text comparisons in support of it. A detailed and totally convincing analysis of the MSS, which has since been modified but never superseded. Classic text criticism.

In rather straightforward, chatty German (now with English translation), but with Austrian spellings - e.g. Theil for 'part' rather than 'Teil', and other words with 'th' rather than 't', constatieren rather than konstatieren for 'ascertained'. Now online.

L'exclusion de l'Église, vécue douloureusement, pousse le pécheur à se mettre spirituellement devant Dieu avec ses fautes. La pénitence infligée conduit au repentir (afflictatio chez Tertullien) et à l'union intérieure avec Dieu à travers le repentir (Cyprien insiste aussi sur la fidélité au Christ). Cependant chacun des deux auteurs s'exprime selon son tempérament (vision plus théorique chez Tertullien, plus mystique chez Cyprien), selon sa fonction et selon les circonstances (pour Cyprien, les nombreuses défections provoquées par la persécution de Dèce). <input type="checkbox"/>	HOW NOTIFIED Conference programme	In contemporary biblical scholarship the radicalism of the Pauline concept of "new creation," introduced in 2 Cor 5:17 and Gal 6:15, rarely comes to the fore. As opposed to ancient Christian writers, who underscored discontinuity between Christianity and Judaism, modern scholars tend to focus on the Jewish background of this oblique phrase, thereby implying a significant amount of continuity. They also debate whether "new creation" is to be interpreted in anthropological or in cosmological terms. The latter is implied in Tertullian's Adv. Marc. 4-5, where he quotes and alludes to 2 Cor 5:17 several times. In my paper I examine these quotations and allusions, paying particular attention to Tertullian's understanding of the newness associated with "new creation," as well as to the anti-Jewish overtones present in this context. I also note the overall role that references to 2 Cor 5:17 play in Tertullian's vetera-nova antithesis, paramount for the argument in Adv. Marc.

The understanding of new creation as necessitating the rejection of the Law and Jewish customs was to become a commonplace in patristic literature. The connection between the newness of all things and the alleged obsolescence of Judaism, is present also in Adv. Marc. 4-5. Similarly, when Tertullian mentions "new creation" (nova conditio) in De ieiunio 14.2, it implies the need for new festivals and observances, distinct from Judaicae ceremoniae. Yet in Adv. Marc., Tertullian, when quoting 2 Cor 5:17, rather than invoking Paul's authority, often weaves parts of this verse into a series of quotations from Isaiah and Jeremiah. Not only does he frequently leave Paul unidentified as the author, but what is more, he several times attributes Paul's words announcing the "passing away of old things," to Isaiah. While emphasizing newness, Tertullian manages to present a complete reversal of the world order as a mere fulfilment of prophecy. As a consequence of placing Paul's words into Isaiah's mouth, a strict distinction between the Old and New Testaments may be blurred. Yet in Tertullian's mind, rather than bringing the two closer to each other, the bond of continuity between them consists in, paradoxically, an insurmountable opposition.
